Sayyid Al-Hakeem Meets with Iraqi Community Delegation in the U.S., Emphasizes National Diversity and Ways to Enhance Stability in Iraq

Sayyid Ammar Al-Hakeem, Head of the National State Powers' Alliance, met with a delegation from the Iraqi community in the United States, led by Mr. Martin Manna, President of the Chaldean Association in Michigan.

During the meeting, they discussed several important issues, including the situation of the Iraqi diaspora in the U.S. and the latest political developments in Iraq and the region. Sayyid Al-Hakeem emphasized that Christians are a valuable component of Iraqi society, highlighting the importance of managing diversity in a way that enhances communication between Iraq and neighboring countries.

H.E. reiterated that Iraq is currently experiencing an unprecedented state of security, political, and social stability, achieved through the sacrifices and bloodshed of Iraqis from all communities. H.E. noted that maintaining and transforming this stability into a lasting condition requires continuous efforts and stressed that this responsibility lies with Iraqis both inside and outside the country.

Sayyid Al-Hakeem emphasized the importance of moderation and centrism in addressing various issues, urging a focus on public interest. H.E. praised Iraq's approach to dealing with crises, including the role of the religious authority, the government, and the Iraqi people's resilience in facing these challenges.

The delegation expressed their appreciation for Sayyid Al-Hakeem's efforts to enhance national stability and promote the values of moderation in Iraq, affirming their commitment to supporting Iraq in all fields.
