Sayyid Al-Hakeem Meets Baghdad Construction Sites Engineers, Workers: Calls to Benefit from Blessed Month of Ramadan, Take Pride in National Efforts

Sayyid Ammar Al-Hakeem, Head of the National State Powers Alliance, met with a group of engineers and workers at a construction site in Baghdad, engaging in discussions about the country's ongoing reconstruction and development efforts.

At the beginning of the meeting, His Eminence urged those present to embrace the blessings of the holy month of Ramadan, a time of divine hospitality, and to seize this opportunity for further success and progress in their work. H.E. emphasized the importance of excellence and quality in their work as part of the Islamic culture, calling on everyone to leave a distinct mark through their efforts and strive for outstanding performance.

H.E. expressed his happiness with the progress made in Iraq's reconstruction, praising the contributions of Iraqi talents and their outstanding efforts in executing and developing vital projects such as bridges. H.E. noted that the achievements made in a short period, carried out by Iraqi companies, represent a significant accomplishment that adds to the series of national achievements contributing to Iraq's development.

Sayyid Al-Hakeem also highlighted that Iraq's human capital and intellectual potential are among the country's greatest assets, which should be fully utilized in the ongoing development efforts. H.E. stressed that the success of this reconstruction campaign would not have been possible without the political, security, and social stability that Iraq enjoys today.

In conclusion, H.E. Al-Hakeem expressed immense pride in the national efforts of the engineers and workers, reaffirming his confidence in Iraq's capabilities for construction and development across various sectors. H.E. encouraged the continued hard work and commitment to quality in all projects that serve the beloved Iraq.
